re: Investigation of Corry Westbrook who is candidate for U. S. House of Representatives for Florida which was initiated on August 30, 2013 and assigned the FEC Case # MUR 6751.

The initial actions of Corry Westbrook were to obtain a Florida voter registration card fraudulently by using her parents' address. This occurred in February 2013 when she had a husband, job and home in Washington, D. C. Her status as a permanent resident of Washington, D. C. has not changed since that time. Since Florida law restricts voting privileges to only those who are permanent residents, Corry Westbrook is now under active investigation for voter fraud by the Florida Secretary of State/Division of Elections.

Additionally, Corry Westbrook filed the FEC Form 1 on March 28, 2013 and used a leased office address of 1127 21st Street. It is in a building known as Maxwell Plaza. In doing so she took action in initiating her campaign PRIOR to formally filing the appropriate paperwork with the FEC. I have now obtained information about the leasing company that you can use to learn the date on which the lease was signed, the monthly office rent charged and how she obtained the funds for the office when she was not yet an official candidate. I intend to also contact the company to obtain this information,

The information can be obtained from:

The FEC Candidate ID for the Corry Westbrook campaign is:
H4FL08077.

I was advised in a telephone conversation with Ruth Heilzer of the FEC that Corry Westbrook's file had been flagged. Thus, you will want to pay particular attention to the accounting of the funds that she submits in her quarterly FEC report documenting her campaign activities as of September 30, 2013. It is my contention that she has been using campaign donations to fly back and forth from her home in Washington, D. C. to campaign in Florida. I do not think that this is legal. It is certainly unethical because it is highly unlikely that she has shared with her donors that she will use their funds for this purpose.
